MultiHelix Think Tank (2+0) / (1+0)

My name is Lucinda David and I am a PhD candidate at the Center for Innovation Research at the Learning Economy with Lund University and affiliated with the Department of Economic Geography at the Faculty of the Social Sciences and I have a Bachelor's degree in Economics and two Master's degree, one in Economics, and Human Geography, respectively. My research interests is on the importance of social capital and agency in the process of regional economic resilience using evidence from the life science industry. I believe this makes me qualified to not only serve as a representative at Multihelix as befitting the nature of their work but also in representing the interests of the students at Lund University. If given the opportunity, I would aim to raise issues important to the studentry at LU such as professional opportunities during and after university, how the Multihelix platform can enhance the educational opportunities of students in the region, the housing and health concerns that plague incoming and current students and the general quality of life and well-being of students in the region. I know the Multihelix platform is interested in how the life science industry, ICT and food-technology industries can work together in providing solutions and improving society as a whole. An important member of this society are the students that make Lund and this region vibrant. As such, if given the opportunity, I intend to bring diversity and the student perspective in discursive process with Multihelix as your representative.
